The roaming gnome has a new travelling companion!

Dallas, TX. Oct. 18, 2025- America's leading online travel agency is pleased to introduce their brand-new travel blogger, and our roaming gnome's new best friend, Angela Thibert. The media relations department of Travelocity appointed Thibert during their monthly meeting yesterday, after their former travel blogger decided to step down in order to raise her young children.

Laura Koops, Travelocity's media relations manager, said: "Ms. Thibert is really passionate about travelling and we're all very excited to hear her fresh new takes on what the world has to offer! She has such creative vision, and such an interesting way of looking at things that I'm very excited to see her first blog post."

Thibert is no stranger to travelling the world over. She has had five years' experience as a flight attendant with WestJet, and has worked in the Media Relations Department at Travelocity for two years. During her tenure at WestJet, she operated a Twitter and Instagram account where she would share pictures and anecdotes from her layovers. Native to Canada, Thibert has a B.A. in Political Science from Guelph University, and a Postgraduate Certificate in Public Relations from Mohawk College.

Thibert caught the travel-bug early. During high school field trips to New York City, and Washington D.C. she was fascinated with the sights, sounds and history of new places and captivated by the architecture. By the time she travelled to Barcelona in 2016, she knew that she wanted to keep travelling and experiencing different cultures for the rest of her life. With her Political Science degree she had originally planned to go into government work, but she “wanted to do something more fun with her life”.

Her first blogging trip will be to Greece this December. She is excited to write about Greece because of the country’s fascinating history and classic architecture. Her first blog post is to go live on Jan. 1, 2026.
